TALKING ABOUT ORDER

When we read a recipe or give instructions, we usually say things in the order they need to happen. “First download the app. Then click on my profile. Finally, send me a message.” We use sequence words and base verbs to show that the instructions are not optional or flexible.

First, Next, Then, After that, Finally, Lastly
Listen to your instructor share their family recipe. Then, answer the questions below to write a description of a recipe that you like to make. (If you don’t cook, what is your favorite meal?) Share your recipe with the class.

What are the ingredients needed to make the recipe?

What kitchen utensils and materials do you need to prepare the recipe?

Write out all of the steps for making your recipe. (Use notes section if more space is needed.)

With a partner, use the play “ingredients” to make cookies following the recipe below. After you make the basic recipe, you can start over to make your own version of cookies. Compete with the other pairs in the class to see who has the best looking cookies.
